Even a fourth grader knows that one billion minus fifty million does not equal zero.

But that is Allison Copening's only idea on how to balance Nevada's revenue shortfall—a shortfall that exceeds one billion dollars. She wants to institute a revenue generating scheme that may someday raise $50 million a year...a scheme that has been rejected many times because it just isn't viable... and wouldn't come close to meeting our CURRENT shortfall.

And she believes that voters should just trust that she will come up with something once she is in the Senate. SHE SAYS THAT SHE WILL GO TO THE LEGISLATURE TO LEARN.

That is an expensive way to teach Allison Copening math...one we can't afford.

Senate Finance Chair, State Senator Bob Beers, CPA, knows better. "No one knows the state budget like Bob Beers," summarized award winning journalist Jon Ralston.

LAS VEGAS SUN

To voters, who are putting candidates through what amounts to a job interview process, the lack of anything substantive from Breeden and Copening must seem rather baffling.

It would be like a chef interviewing for a restaurant job and declining to explain what cuisine he'd be bringing to the kitchen.
